GLEANERS FOOD DRIVE RESULTS

MSYSA is proud to share the success of the Gleaners Food Drive held in conjunction with ODP Winter Training on November 9. Thanks to the generosity of our ODP players, families, and staff, we collected an incredible 673 pounds of food, which will help provide approximately 505 meals to individuals and families in need across our community. This outstanding effort reflects the strong sense of teamwork and compassion within the Michigan soccer family.

We are incredibly grateful to everyone who contributed and helped make this food drive such a meaningful success. Giving back is an important part of the ODP experience, and it was inspiring to see our players support the community beyond the field. Thank you for helping MSYSA and ODP make a positive impact - both in soccer and in the lives of others.

Soccer Parenting Blog: Playing Soccer is a Smart Choice

Playing soccer is more than just a sport - it's a powerful vehicle for building healthy bodies, strong minds, and resilient kids. According to the Soccer Parenting blog, soccer offers a wide range of benefits: it supports cardiovascular fitness, strengthens muscles and bones, improves flexibility, and helps maintain a healthy weight - all while giving kids an outlet to burn energy and stay active. On top of physical perks, soccer helps players grow mentally, boosting confidence, enhancing attention and memory, and fostering self-esteem through teamwork, improvement, and personal growth.

But the value of soccer goes beyond fitness and brainpower. It cultivates essential life skills: teamwork, respect, commitment, discipline, and resilience. Players learn to win with grace and lose with dignity, to support teammates, and to navigate challenges both on and off the field. The social bonds, sense of belonging, and shared experiences create a supportive community that encourages kids not just to play the game - but to grow into well-rounded individuals. For parents and coaches looking to give children more than just a sport, soccer remains a smart, meaningful choice. To read more, click here!

Soccer Parenting Blog: Our Clubs and Coaches Can and Must Do Better

The article delivers a powerful call-to-action for everyone involved in youth soccer - coaches, club leaders, and parents alike - to hold themselves to higher standards. It shared painful stories of players being sidelined, bullied, or ignored: children who travel long distances only to see minimal playing time, athletes left off teams without communication, and kids publicly chastised by coaches when they make mistakes. The author is clear: this isn't okay. Youth soccer should be about development, belonging, respect, and growth - not neglect, unfair treatment, or emotional harm.

That's why the article urges clubs and coaches to adopt transparent policies around playing time standards, respectful coach-player interactions, and clear complaint procedures. It emphasizes the need for clubs to establish a culture where every player feels valued, heard, and supported - and where parents who raise legitimate concerns are taken seriously, not dismissed. It's a reminder that soccer isn't just about winning games - it's about creating a safe, encouraging environment that nourishes confidence, growth, and love for the game. As the article puts it: "We can do better. We must do better." To read more, click here!

USYS Coaching Articles: Parallel Play

The concept of parallel play reminds us that young players - especially in age groups like U6 and U8 - often learn best when they play side-by-side rather than in structured, team-oriented drills. According to the article, children at these ages aren't yet ready for cooperative or competitive play; instead, they explore, run, dribble, and experiment independently while simply being around other kids. This developmental stage is natural and beneficial: by allowing players to "play next to each other" without pressure, coaches give them space to develop coordination, confidence, and a comfort level with being in a group environment.

US YOUTH

For clubs and coaches, understanding parallel play means trusting the developmental process and designing sessions that reflect where players are - not where we wish they were. Activities should prioritize individual control, fun, and loose structure over formal tactics or high-pressure competition. This approach helps nurture not only technical skills but also positive early experiences, enjoyment of the game, and a love for soccer that can last a lifetime. As we build our youth programs around these principles, we ensure every child has the opportunity to grow at their own pace and enjoy the game while building the foundation for future team play. USYS Coaching Articles: Parents Who Are Getting It Right

The article highlights how positive and involved parenting can make a huge difference in a young player's soccer experience. Parents who "get it right" focus on encouragement over pressure, support rather than instruction, and respect for coaches, teammates, and referees - creating a healthy environment where kids can enjoy the game, grow in confidence, and develop life skills.

At MSYSA, we believe strongly in these ideals. When parents trust coaches, respect the process, and support players with encouragement and patience, it helps build a positive soccer culture across clubs and teams. We encourage all parents and guardians to embrace this mindset: prioritize enjoyment, growth, and sportsmanship. Together, we can help our players not just become better athletes - but more confident, resilient, and grounded individuals. To read more, click here!
